

Paul Wong Retires from DWP After 32 Years of Good Service

On April 1, Paul Wong, Senior Data Technician for the Information Technology Services Business Unit of the DWP Joint System, retired from active civil service after dedicating 32 years of providing excellent customer service to all business units within the Department of Water and Power.

Paul started his career with an emergency appointment in April 1971, where he worked as a Relief Commercial Service Representative during the conversion of the now automated Customer Information System. He received a permanent status as a clerk, later promoting to mechanical helper, commercial service representative, data processing trainee to technician, and in October 1998, he became a senior data processing technician, where he was assigned to the ITS Security Group.

During his years at the DWP, Paul became somewhat of a legend, developing a reputation of being a person you could count on and could call anytime when you had an ITS problem or request. It was guaranteed that you would receive his immediate attention. He was known to go the extra nine yards to help resolve your problem. His work ethics were always of the highest degree, as was his dedication, professionalism and thoroughness. He was a courteous, generous, and thoughtful employee. Paul held an enormous amount of respect and appreciation for the DWP. It was a source for training, education and opportunities throughout his career.

On March 20, Paul was joined by family members, co-workers and special friends at a retirement farewell party held at the Pasadena Hilton Hotel in celebration of his long, devoted years at the DWP. It was a chance for all to wish and express their utmost best to him for an ongoing well-deserved retirement.

The Club congratulates Paul on his excellent service to the City.

This story was provided to Alive! by Paul's former co-workers. We thank them for their contribution.
