- Ondrea Tye, Planning.

John's comments: Just plain eerie....it almost looks like it's a frame out of a real weird music video. I like it! Nice work, Ondrea. This is the kind of shot that can never be duplicated.

"The chicharones, complete with hot sauce, measuring 3 feet by 1.5 feet, was the biggest pig skin I have ever seen. The vendor in the background said this one side of the pig was fried in a made-to-order cauldron using four gallons of oil. The photo was taken Dec. 13, 2004 (the feast day of Our Lady of Guadalupe) around the corner from the Basilica in Mexico City, Mexico.

- Gina Enrile-Caguiat, Engineering, Public Works.

John's comments: I've never had a pig's ear, nor am I rushing to the Farmer's Market to get one, either. But when you see the guy on the left, you realize how large this thing is. What I like most about this picture is the earthy feeling 1 get from the rough stone sidewalk, the painted building sections, the worn-out deposit box and the bucket of hot sauce. I feel as though I can just walk right into this picture, prop my back against the wall and finally finish Don Quixote!

-James Francis, Retired.

John's comments: Jellyfish are some of the coolest things to watch. In fact, there's a real nice exhibit at the Aquarium of the Pacific (fyi: we sell discount tickets to it). I've tried on numerous occasions to get pictures of them but was never successful. James, you did good with this shot. You really captured the carefree flowing behavior of these very strange fish. (Or whatever you call them! Are they fish? Animals? What exactly are jellyfish? Help! Email me with the proper definition and I'll send you two free tickets to the Aguarium of the Pacific.)

"These_pictures were taken on a Trip to Tikal in Guatemala, the scenery is as beautiful as pictured.

Lourdes Zaldivar, LAPD

John's comments: Yes, Lourdes, the scenery is beautiful, and what strikes me the most is the lush greenery and the rich blue sky contrasted by the puffy yet ominous clouds. I also really like the perspective with which you took this picture. It shows just how prominently this pyramid juts out of the jungle. Nice work; hope you had fun on your trip!

Runners Up:

Michael Zepeda, James Washington, Diane Johnson, Bob Hill (DWP), Cecille Pelayo Consebido (Management Analyst II, Sanitation, Public Works), James Francis (Retired), and Jennifer Smith, City Attorney.
